Document Is Atlantic-Oriented

Britain Presents New Draft Of Declaration on NATO Aims

Britain has presented to other members of the North Atlantic suggestion by U. S. Secretary of for a declaration of alliance

It is reportedly more Atlanticoriented than a draft by France that was presented in October. According to diplomatic sources in Brussels, the British proposal contains no references to a separate European identity inside the alliance. The original French text had stated that "Europe had a defense dimension of its own" and that European political unity had a "favorable effect" on the contribution of European countries to the alliance. The British plan, presented to the allies last week will be dis-cussed formally by the NATO ambassadors here tomorrow. The members hope to agree on a final version of the declaration when their foreign ministers meet in Ottawa June 18-19.

Alliance diplomats in Brussels are anxious to see how the new French government will react to the British draft. The new president, Valery Giscard d'Estaing, is believed to be more open than France's previous leaders to strengthening Atlantic ties, but it is also thought that he firmly favors maintaining a European identity in relations with the United States. Besides tha NATO discussions tomorrow, Foreign Ministry officials from the nine Common Market countries will exchange views on the proposed NATO occlaration at a meeting in Bonn May 27-28.

PARIS, May 23 (Renters) .-The French Air Force will join the air forces of six NATO countries in a two-week exercise starting tomorrow, officials said here today.

Squadrons of French Mirage-5 jets will take part, along with aircraft from the United States, Britain, West Germany, Canada, Belgium and the Netherlands. France withdrew from the NATO military command structure in 1966, but its armed forces have since occasionally taken part in allied land, sea and air exercises.

Judge Bazelon added that the April 30 release of transcripts of 31 tapes, including the five demanded by the committee, further obviated the committee's need for the originals.

He found no merit in the committee's argument that the tapes themselves were needed to determine whether portlons that were deleted should not have been and to clear up ambiguities to the transcripts. The judge held that the panel's suit "points to no specific legislative decisions that cannot responsibly he made without access to materials uniquely contained in the tapes or without resolution of the ambiguities that the transcripts may contain."

Ulster Protestants Plan to Step Up Strike working-class residents sought to

By Alvin Shuster BELFAST, May 23 (NYT).

Leaders of extremist Protestant groups decided today to intensify their protest strike in the campaign to bring nown the provincial government here. Spokesmen for the Ulster Workers Council, which organized the resistance movement now crippling Northern Ireland, said they would step up efforts to curtail all gasoline and oil delivery except for medical need. This government will soon break," an organizer said.

The harricades and checkpoints employed to keep workers from their jobs largely disappeared today. But the hard-liners said that such attempts to seal off the city were largely irrelevant now because automobiles would soon be without gasoline.

With the province coming to a standstill—most industry has been shut down-the British government faces a crucial decision on how to avoid total chaos without a possible military confronta-tion with the well-armed Protestant groups. British leaders and the provincial government have refused to talk with the leaders of the newly formed workers council, which is seeking to force new elections in an effort to supplant the governing coalition of moderate Roman Catholics and Protestants. Later today, Prime Minister Harold Wilson called an emergency meeting in London tomorrow of the leaders of Northern Ireland's three political parties involved in the provincial executive to discuss the crisis. Electricity Warning

Such activity led Merlyn Rees secretary of state for Northern Ireland, to accuse the movement's leaders of trying to "set up a provisional government in North-ern Ireland, issuing their own ration books." He again insisted Britain would not yield to blackmail.

Still, the provincial government, with the support of Mr. Rees, made a major concession yesterday to the extremist Protestants by agreeing to water down proposals for an all-Ireland council. At Damascus airport after nearly five hours of talks with Syrian President Hafez al-Assad, Mr. Kissinger said that there was "good progress" toward a disengagement agreement.

A high official aboard his plane bound for Israel on the 10th shuttle of Mr. Kissinger's Middle East mission said that progress was made on thinning out of forces on both sides of the Golau Heights cease-lire line and on the number of United Nations troops to be stationed there.

Mr. Kissinger gave a luncheon today in Damascus for Foreign Minister Abdel Halim Khaddam and other Syrian officials who participated in the negotiations. In the toast, Mr. Kissinger described a separation of Israeli and Syrian forces as "a first step" for a "just and permanent peace," in the Middle East.

"It is time that the peoples of the Middle East begin to devote their talents to peaceful pursuits," he said.

Then, referring to his current disengagement effort, Mr. Kissinger said; "It is my judgment that we have made great progress in this negotiation. Even if we should for some reason not complete it in this session we wilt surely bring it to a successful conclusion in the near future."

Mr, Khaddam, in responding, sain the October war against Israet was fought for the sake of a "just peace." He praised Mr. Kissinger's diplomatic efforts, saying "the American secretary should not be surprised when he hears that he is the first responsible American official from whose lips we hear the clesr enunciation of the progress of a just and a permanent peace." LISBON, May 23 .- Foreign Minister Mario Soares today praised the leaders of the rebel movements in Portugal's three African territories as "men of great stature" and appealed to the white population to accept self-determination.

Mr. Soares, a Socialist who has been the foreign minister in the provisional government set up by the military junts, made the statement on the eve of his departure for London where he will meet Guinea rebel leaders for the first official peace talks in the 13-year-old African bush wars. The Portuguese government is noping for similar talks soon with the rebels in Mozamblque and Angola.

Mr. Soares said the first task was to achieve a cease-fire, and that the future of the three territories will be determined in a referendum.

"Details of tha referendum have not been worked out," he told newsmen in an interview. "One of the primary tasks of the government is to calm the white population there.

"We must tell them that it [seif-determination] is in their own interest and for their children's future. It best defends them. We need their cooperation."

The minister then voiced praise for the leaders of tha rebel movements—the same men whom the former rightist regime, ousted hy an army coup a month ago, had called terrorists and with whom it had refused to deal. "They are men of great stature," Mr. Sources said, "not only in their own countries, but in the international field."

Russia Warns China of Curbs On Use of Siberian Rivers MOECOW, May 23 (UPI).than 100 Chinese and Soviet solciters,

The Soviet Union today warned Peking that it would cut off Chinese use of Siherian inland vaterways unless China started showing "respect" for Russian rights and territory.

The warning was delivered to Chinese Charge d'Affaires Ma Liell by the Foreign Ministry. Relations between the two countries have deteriorated steadily since China refused to release Soviet helicopter and crew hetd since March 14.

Some diplomats said that the warning appeared directly related to the helicopter incident. But others said the inclusion of the reference to territory may indicate that it relates rather to the larger question of the disbuted horder.

The warning statement carried by Tass news agency, and by the government newspaper, Izvestia, did not specifically mention the helicopter. Neverthetess, it was the first implicit threat of apecific retaliation by the Russians, who earlier this month warned Peking that it would face "the inevitable consequences" if the craft and its three-man crew were not returned immediately. Chinese Ambassador Liu. Hsing-chuan was called home for consultations after that warning was issued.

Today's statement said that the Russians "have always received favorahty" Chinese requests to use the waterways. They connect the Amur and Ussuri Rivers near Khabarovsk and the Chinese use them when the border Kazakevichev stream hecomes too shutlow for navigation in the summer.
"The Soviet side sees no dif-

BRUSSELS, May 23 (UPI).-The State Department has quiet-ly fired two employees who systematically stole at least $41,000 from the U.S. Embassy here, an embassy spokesman said today.
Although the embassy refused to give the names of the men, tt said they were long-time employees—20 years or more. American sources said the total theft over the years could be $300,000.

The emptoyees, both non-Americans, were dismissed in February after a special State Department audit uncovered six years possibly more—of "false purchase orders, kickbacks from auppliers and inflated prices" in the embassy's administration depart-ment, the spokesman said,

Union Leaders From Europe Draft Policy

By David Haworth COPENHAGEN, May 23 (IHT). Trade union leaders, representing more than 30 million European workers both in and out-side the Common Market, met here today to define a united approach to the energy problem, full employment and inflation. It was the first meeting of the European Trade Union Confede-ration, which was formed 12 months ago. It is supposed to not as an interiocutor between workers and West European governments.

Although intended primarily as a pressure group in the Euro-pean Economic Community, the confederation has wider, if raguer, aims. Its uncertain po-litical objectives were demonstrated today when it accepted for membership the three million workers belonging to Europe's unions with a Christian orientathe way for affiliation later of the 3.7 million members of the ·Communist-dominated CGIL organization in Italy.

The French Communist-led union, the CGT, has so far shown no inclination to join although some confederation leaders hope it will follow the Italians later.
A standing ovation was given to Portuguese observers attending the two-day conference. "They will have our support," said the retiring British president. Lord Feather. "We hope they will help their country to take its right-ful place in the Europe of freedom," he added. Lord Feather, retired head of Britain's Trade Unions Congress, pledged that the Portuguese unionists would get every assistance from other unions in their efforts to build their own uniob movement. Today's proceedings finally ended any hope that the U.S. AFL-CIO would have any further ties with European unions. The bulk of confederation memhership is made up of the non-Communist International Confederation of Free Trade Unions. whose headquarters is in Brussels. The AFL-CIO used to be a member, but was withdrawn by Its chief, George Meany, in opposition to the admission of the large Communist unions.

campaign.

Mr. Ford's comments were in response to a question at a Re-publican fund-raising dinner attended by about 500 persons.

The Vice-President reiterated his belief that the President was innocent of any involvement in the Watergate break-in or cover-up. But, ha said, "I want the constitutional process to continue as rapidly and with as much evidence as can possible be made available." Noting that the President had already turned over to the committee tapes, transcripts and other evidence, Mr. Ford said that this material should first be "accumulated" and "analyzed." "Then," he said, "if they [the committee] want any more that is relevant to the issues—to the impeachable offense in the Constitution—I hope the President will give it to them—the sooner the better. "I don't think that when all the evidence is in they've got a case. I happen to think from all the evidence I've seen that he [the President] is innocent. But let's get it all out there and the quicker the better, because we've got some problems that ought to be solved." Earlier in the day at an impromptu press conference in New York, where he was honored as 1974 father of the year, Mr. Ford expressed the hope that the White House would work out a compromise with the special Watergate prosecutor in a dispute over evidence that he is seeking.

The White House has indicated that it will appeal a federal court order to turn over 64 tapes sought hy prosecutor Leon Jaworski. Mr. Ford said that if Mr. Jaworski needs more "tape material . . . I hope there will be some compromise with the White House." D Los Angeles Times.

House Panel Votes to Close Some Common Tax Loopholes

By Peter Milius

WASHINGTON, May 23 (WP). The House Ways and Mcans Committee has tentatively decided to close about $2 billion worth of the country's most familiar tax loopholes-those primarily used. not by big corporations and the rich, but by the average taxpayer wbo itemizes his deductions.

Under this "tax simplification," taxpayer could no longer: Deduct state gasoline taxes.

• Exclude his first $100 in dividends. • Deduct any medical-insurance premiums the can now deduct them up to $150). • Deduct the first $200 of union dues or other "productionof-income" expenses the can now deduct all such outlays; the committee would only let him deduct the excess over 8200).

In addition, the committee has roted to tighten the rules gorerning deduction of medical expenses and prescription costs and to limit deductions for the business use of a home or for second "vacation homes." The committee, which bas been deluged with letters of complaint that it intends to "give back" the estimated $2 billion a year that would be generated by wiping out all these provisions. Members of the staff say several means of giving back the money are under consideration. Among them are an across-the-board tex-rate reduction: increasing the standard deduction available to taxpayers who do not itemize; and allowing all taxpayers who itemize to take one general "miscelleneous" deduction to make up for the various specific deductions taken away. These proposals are different, both motivation and effect, from the tax-cut provisions pending in the Senate. The main Senate proposal would raise the $750 sonal exemption every taxpayer is entitled to take for himself and each dependent. It is intended to lower tha net total of taxes paid, thus leaving consumers with more to spend and stimulating the economy.

Part of Reform Bill

The "tax simplification" proposals are based in part on auggestions made by the Nixon administration last year. The committee has made them part of a general tax-reform bill on which it does not expect to finish work until about midyear. The hill if passed by the House, would then go to the Senate and chances of final passage before Congress ad-journs in the summer are unsure.

Under present law, texpayers can deduct medical expenses in excess of 3 percent of their adjusted gross incomes and pre-scription costs in excess of 1 percent. The committee would lump the two and allow deductions only when the total exceeds 5 percent. The committee would allow de-ductions for the business use of a taxpayer's home only if he were self-employed or used his home for business as a condition of his

U.K. Study Chief Says Pill Not 'Acquitted'

By Morton Mintz

WASHINGTON, May 23 (WP). -The organizer of a new British study on oral contraceptives yesterday rejected a statement that the study "acquitted" the drugs of "most of the serious ade-effect charges" against them

"It's an exaggeration." Dr. Chiford Kay said of the "acquitted" statement, which was made in a Reuters article (IHT, May 22). The study in fact confirmed most of the serious side effects." Dr. Kay said in London in a telephone interriev.

In a related derelopment iii Washington, three government scientists who have reviewed the study said that even Dr. Kay and his colleagues in the Royal Col-lege of General Practitioners had drawn conclusions more "rosy" than were warranted by their own

Preliminary Results

Preliminary results of the study, the largest of its kinn, were oisclosed by the college at a news conference in London on Tuesday. It involved 46,000 women, was begun by 1,400 general practitioners in 1963 and will continue to 1976.

Half the women began using birth-control pills. The women in the half that did out were matched with the users for age and marital status. Other factors. such as socio-economic status and mumber of children, were "allowed for," in Dr. Kar's piwasc.

The physicians kept case histories on the users and the controls and knew, because the British medical system assures it, when any of the women were treated by medical specialists. The design and execution of the study were praised here, in a telephone in-terview, by Dr. Philip Corfman, the Director of the Center for Population Research of the National Institute for Child Health and Human Development.

The serious side-effects, said by Dr. Eay to have been confirmed, were strokes and other cometimes disabling or fatal blood-clotting diseases. In plliusers, these diseases occurred at rates five or slx times higher than in nonusers, he said,

The Royal College concluded from its study that the overall "estimated risk at the present time of using the pill is one that a properly infurmed woman should be happy to take . . ."

At the Center for Population Research here, Dr. Corfman and tvo colleagues, statistician Danicl Scigel and physician Beinz Berendes, were most troubled by this conclusion: "While it is evident that there are disadvantages associated with the oral contraceptives, the risk of serious effects is small, and the benefits to be expected from the associated reduction in menstrual disorders, iron deficiency anemia and fibro-adenoisis [benigh tumor] of the breast, are worthy of careful consideration."

Dr. Coriman made these points: The data do not permit reli-able analysis of certain risks, particularly cervical cancer, the long-term consequences of elevated blood pressure, liver tumors and diabetic effects.

Relatives in U.S. Differ on Status Of Missing GIs

WASHINGTON, May 23 (AP). -Almost 18 months after the signing of the Vietnam peace accords, about 1,070 American n ilitary men are still listed as missing in action.

But although some relativesparticularly wives anxious to be legally free to start their lives anely-would profer their missing menfolk declared officially dead, others have a financial reason to prefer the status quo. Defense Department officals said.

Each month, the Pentagon sends out checks for more than 52 million to wives and dependents of the missing. There are also a few women the officials point out, whose husbands' service records are nearing 20 years. They hope that an official declaration of death will be delayed, for after 20 years a widow is entitled to full retiremeot benefits, usually 55 percent of what her husband's retirement pay would have been.

Further complicating the situation is a recent federal court decision which requires that each family be offered the chance to take part in the investigation of whether there is enough evidence to declare the missing man dead.

At the same time, Mr. Seigel and Dr. Coriman praised the study itself as "excellent" in design with "remarkably well-examined and well-coordinated" data.

In the telephone interview, Dr. Kay said that the study, while confirming serious adverse effects indicated them to be "rare. And when considered in the context of the vast majority of illnesses in which the pill had no effect, and the small but quite important number of illnesses in which the pill had a benefical effect, we believe that the risks can be seen to be acceptable, considering the important advantages of the pill as a contraceptive," he said.

"We did discount some minor effects which are supposedly due to the pill—depression, vaginal discharge, beadache and migraine, and probably—we're not sure loss of libido or sex drive," Dr.

House Refuses to Increase or Cut Arms Aid to Vietnam

By Mary Russell

WASHINGTON, May 23 (WP). The House yesterday voted to hold military assistance for South Vietnam at present levels and to leave intact U.S. troop strength abroad and funding for the Trident nuclear submarine and the controversial B-1 supersonic

The level of aid was considerably below the administration's request and $300 million below the House Armed Services Committee's recommendation.

The House anthorized $1.126 billion in military aid for Vietnam-the same amount as last year. The administration had requested $1.6 billion, the committee bad authorized $1.4 billion and liberals had sought to reduce the amount to the $900-million level authorized by the Senate Armed Services Committee

But in a bit of horse trading the floor, the chairman of the House committee, Edward Hebert, D-La., offered to substitute the $1.126-billion figure for the $900-million proposal put bement by Rep. Robert Leggett, D-Calif.

Rep. Leggett then tried to lower the 81.126-billion figure to an even $1 billion but lost on a 211-to-190 vote.

Secretary of Defense James Schlesinger made a strong plea Tuesday for increased aid, saying that it was unworthy of the United States to punish South Vietnam retroactively because of American disaffection with the

But Rep. Robert Gialmo, D-Conn., argued that it was important in principle for Congress to stop "giving a blank check" to the Defense Department on military aid to Vietnam. He added that a cut would also send the Vietnamese a message that they should make an effort to abide by the Paris cease-fire agreement and work out an end to the conflict.

Rep. Leggett said he did not approve "pulling the plug" on the South Vietnamese, but that the United States should show some restraint in supporting them. He

Amendment Loses

An amendment by the majority leader, Thomas O'Neill, D.-Mass., to reduce troops levels overseas by 100,000 men during an 18-month period was rejected by 163 to 240. Rep. O'Neill's amendment would have left it up to the secretary of defense to decide where the troop cuts should be

Rep. O'Neill argued that it would cost $22 hillion next year to maintain the 435,000 troops stationed on foreign soil. He said bringing 100,000 troops home would save more than $1 billion. But opponents of the troop cut argued that it would weaken the balanced force reduction tal now going on in Vienna with Warsaw Pact nations. Rep. R bert read a telegram from Se retary of State Henry Kissing which said a unilateral reductiof U.S. troops in Europe at th time "would be useful to no o but the Soviets."

Watergate: Unhappy Anniversary

The President has an odd way of celebrating Watergate anniversaries. Wednesday marked the passage of one full year since Mr. Nixon issued his compendious statement of Mar 22, 1973, promising to make available all relevant information on the complex of scandals that go by the name of Watergate. He chose to commemorate the occasion by informing the House Judiciary Committee, which is conducting impeachment hearings and which has-if anything-a larger and stronger claim on relevant evidence than the other bodies of inquiry do, that he would decline to produce any further Watergate tapes requested or subpoenaed by it. The full story of Watergate and of his own involvement in it, Mr. Nixon advised the committee, reposes in the White House materials already in the committee's hands.

In more ways than one, that is an interesting assertion. It not only confirms that the President is prepared to defy the committee's requests for material it deems necessary to conducting its inquiry. It also confirms that there is no better documentary case for Mr. Nixon to make concerning his own rule in the cover-up than that which can be made (if it can) from the highly incriminating documents and tapes now in the committee's possession. May 22, 1974, was a rleak day for those who still held out hope that somewhere, somehow, the President could come forward with persuasive exculpatory evidence. Apparently there is none.

Although we believe that Mr. Nixon's outright deflance of Congress in this matter is as unconstitutional as it is unwise, it does occur to us that he has a point in his assertion that more than enough is now known for the committee to act-never mind that it isn't the point he was seeking to make. For the plain fact is that both the magnitude of the shocks and revelations of the past year and the complicated legal disputes the President has promoted and prolonged with Congress and the courts have combined to distract people from what they already know. They have given the whole sorry affair the aspect of a continuing, if not interminable, Grade B thriller, as distinct from the aspect of a body of confirmed information which is, in itself, more than sufficient to require 2 public response. The question, in other words, is not so much "What is going to happen next?" or "What will we learn about tomorrow?" but rather, "What do we already Show?"

Think about it: We know plenty.

We know that the President's best defense throughout-and it is a terrible defense-is that he so mismanaged the conduct of his office that he was unaware that his aides were authorizing common burglaries, were forging State Department cables, were perjuring themselves before federal prosecutors and grand juries, were paying blackmall money to criminals to buy silence about the White House's own involvement in their crimes, were systematically reeking to politicize and pervert the allegedly apolitical agencies of government (the CIA, the IRS, the FBI, among others) for the sake of wreaking personal vengeance on institutions and individuals they considered enemies.

We know that the President, on the eve of the sentencing of the originally convicted Watergate conspirators, learned that their trial had been shewed by perjured testimony and failed to so inform the judge.

We know that the President has repeatedly and systematically misled the American public in his statements "from the heart" on this matter, telling them things he knew to

We know that six of his former aides have been sentenced to terms in federal peniten-

We know that his appointees have conspired to destroy evidence in criminal cases. We know that the man he twice selected to be his Vice-President has been convicted of a felony, forced to resign office and disbarred from the practice of law.

We know that the President-a great scourge of "welfare cheating"-was found to be almost half a million dollars light on his federal income tax.

We know that indictments are now outstanding and trials awaited for his closest White House associates and onetime most powerful deputies for a series of alleged criminal acts. We know that he has, while ciaiming all the protections and safeguards accorded an ordinary citizen in trouble with the law, simultaneously and shamelessly utilized the great and unique powers of the presidency not only to argue his own ease (falsely) but to protect himself from scrutiny by the Congress or the courts. He declines to honor subpoents. He fires the special prosecutor he has promised to give full rein when that prosecutor appears to be getting warm. And now he tells us, in the course of telling the House Judiciary Committee, that he is only doing these recalcitran. things to protect "future" presidents. We think the evidence is overwhelming that he is, on the contrary, trying only to protect this one.

Presumably the members of the House Judiciary Committee and those legislators outside the committee who have anthorized its inquiry vill seek some further action on the materials Mr. Nixon has now declined to furnish. And presumably, too, his deflance of the committee will be added to the list of Constitution-bending offenses for which he, as President, is responsible. But we would hope that the committee would not permit itself to be drawn into a prolonged and diverting dispute over the production of this evidence to the exclusion of its responsibility to continue and conclude its inquiry as quickly and carefully as possible. The American people know plenty-and the members of the House Judiciary Committee know even more. A variety of charges against Mr. Agnew were never fully adjudicated because he preferred that they not be, and the same may be true of certain of the charges against Mr. Nixon because he too has now indicated that he will not risk orderly and complete adjudication in a single body that is empowered to consider his case-namely, the United States Congress, Mr. Agnew conned a plea. Mr. Nixon is merely refusing in the name of his office-or what remains of itto let the full information come to light.

People have been, in our view, exceptionally patient so far, and that is especially true of the legislators themselves. And they have also been exceptionally judicious and restrained. But it seems to us that, by this latest act of evasion and contempt, the President has released everyone from the injunction against drawing inferences from his refusal to produce suppoensed evidence. And if he will not cooperate -so be it: The House will have to proceed without him on the basis of what it now knows.

17th-Century Uster

Minister Wilson has rightly described as something "out of the 17th century," once more threatens to engulf Northern Ireland in bloody strife.

This time it is the hard-line Protestants who are attempting to turn back the clock in Ulster through a general strike. Their aim is to reverse the hopeful healing process that was initiated last year when moderate Protestant and Catholic leaders agreed to share power in Belfast and to open a new era of cooperation with the neighboring Irish Republic through an All-Ireland Council.

In the face of this potentially devastating challenge, the British government has no

Militant sectarianism, which British Prime alternative but to stand fast behind the compromise agreement it helped to promote after years of bloodshed and laborious negotiation.

> To yield to the Protestant extremists' demands would be to play directly into the hands of the equally extreme Catholic lunatic fringe, and to sacrifice the hardwon confidence of the substantial Catholic minority in Ulster who, alongside the Protestant moderates, are ready to accept the compromise. It would be to surrender the province to the tyranny of bigotry once again from both extremes and to almost certain civil war.

DOSTON-In writing to the Senate Judiciary Committee about the latest White House attempt to obstruct his work, Leon Jaworski reminded us that the impeachment inquiry is not the only threat to President Nixon. The work of the special prosecutor's office remains highly significant, and beyond that there is particular symbolism in the person of Jaworski, What stimulated his letter was an argument by James St. Clair, the President's counsel, against production of 64 tapes subpoensed for the Watergate trials. St. Clair claimed that the special prosecutor had no right at all to sue Nixon for evidence, because he is a subordinate of the President's in the executive branch and has no independent legal standing.

in the White House last fall as a possible defense against the original tapes subpoena by Archibeld Cox. But it was never advanced in court then, perhaps because it seemed a politically risky stance or because the thenattorney general, Elliot Pichardson, objected.

Desperation

It is a fair sign of Nixon's legal desperation that his lawyer made the argument now. For the independent position of the special prosecutor, including his right to seek White House evidence by judicial process, is if anything clearer now than it was last fall, The uproar over the firing of Cox forced the President to give assurances to Jaworski in terms of personal undertakings, commitments to Congress and official regulations.

Judge John Sirica recited that history in rejecting the St. Clair argument as a "nullity." Nor is the argument likely to fare any better on appeal. Judges are too practical to take seriously Alice-in-Wonderland notion that Jaworski has been assured a "right" to sue but not to win. In any event, the idea that the executive branch can speak with only one voice in the courts has long since been dispelled.

Why, then, did the White House make the argument? Nixon's position these days has been compared to Mr. Micawber's, honing that if he hangs on long enough, something will turn np. In this case. he must hope to play the appeal process so that it carries him over the summer-in the courts and in the impeachment proceeding.

St. Clair has indicated that he will take the Jaworski subpoens to the Supreme Court, which is due to recess for the summer next month. In the ordinary course of things, it would not consider this case before October. Then St Clair might well argue that the House Judiciary Committee ought to wait and see what the Supreme Court says about executive privilege, however different the setting of the issue.

Jaworski can be expected to move for urgent Supreme Court action, perhaps by the seldomused procedure of asking the justices to grant review before judgment in the Court of Appeals. He can argue that expedited consideration is the only way to prevent further long delays in the Watergate trials. And there is not much purpose in consideration by the Court of Appeals, which rejected the Nixon claims on executive privilege in the earlier tabes case.

This is not the only trouble that Jaworski has bad at the White House. Ever since the public fury over the October relations between Israel and the public interest instead of Nixon's. But Jaworski has shown us that a prosecutor should be a lawyer.

not a soldier. Hardly anyone has noticed one of the hardest things he successfully did: maintained secrecy on the tapes that he had for months before the President published edited transcripts. There was not one leak, from that large office, despite the sordid character of what was on the tapes. The White House, by contrast, was basy trying to push out its laundered versions through senstors and others.

Leon Jaworski is the more significant because everyone knows he began this role with no personal ideological bias against Nixon. He was a trial lawyer from Texas, a leader of the estably respectful view of the American presidency. First-hand experience has evidently taught him that the values most gravely wounded by this President are those of the true conservative: law, honor, country. Conserva-tives will note what Jaworski's steadfast lawyer's position quietly conveys: that Richard Nixon can-tions with new and sophisticated rationales. He wrote in the fiscal 1975 annual Defense Department report: "The United States today, as op-

This is not a role we have welcomed; it is a role that historical necessity has thrust upon us . . . There is nobody else to pick up the torch.

The new rationales, mixing some truth with much else, in-clude these: "Defense" is only 29 percent of the federal budget and 6 percent of the gross national product. There are higher costs because of the voluntee Army. The military budget barely keeps up with inflation. The United States cannot afford to stand by idly while the Rus-sians expand their strategic arse-

Several Packages

Before an examination of these rationales, there should be scrutiny of the form and size of the administration's request. It comes in several packages, masking the full extent of the authorization sought for fiscal 1975, which begins July 1. The Pentagon is seeking $229 billion in "obligational authority"—funds to be spent in fiscal 1975 plus some down payments on planned weap-ons systems—as well as $6.2 bil-lion in supplemental funds for the current 1974 fiscal year.

Approving a separate supplement to last year's budget makes fiscal 1974's share look bigger,

Sen. John C. Stennis, chairman of the Seriate Armed Services Committee, was not fooled. On Feb. 5, he said that "the sum of these two requests is $99.1 bil-lion," and that "this sum compares to $80.2 billion," which was "appropriated for the Department of Defense last year for fiscal year 1974."

When the Atomic Energy Commission's weapons program is added to this sum, it breaks the $100-billion barrier. The size of this request is unprecedented in war or peace.

The government's bookkeping system was changed in 1968. Before then; the federal budget was composed of the total expenditures of the executive agencies. Since then, the budget has also included expenditures from such sources as social security, the highway trust fund and railroad retirement. As a result, largely payments, federal outlays have increased 23 percent in two years. With a bigger "pie," the slice for "delense" looks relatively smaller even when it sets a rec-

By Peter Grose

NEW YORK—In the space of shortly more than a week, the emotions of those concerned with making peace between Arabs and Israelis have gyrated from grief to fury to futility to something on the way to euphoria The sense of futility grew from the terror and violence of Mazlot and Lepanon-just at a moment when Israel and Syria, that most intransigent of the neighboring Arab states, seemed on the verge of a far-reaching security accord, On Saturday came a sudden revival of hope. The leaders of Syria and Israel alike obviously perceived their national interests in reaching an agreement, transcending the passions and frustra-tions of a tense moment. They signalled readiness to act on these perceptions—however unpopular any accommodation may prove to be among extremists on both

The disengagement agreement that Secretary of State Kissinger is now piecing together between Jerusalem and Damascus is likely to be far more firmly based than it might otherwise have been, for having been completed on the ashes of Maalot. If the interests in reaching the accommodation were so great as to permit emotional peoples to rise above one of the starkest flares of hatred that the area has seen, then there might-just might-be something durable on which a generation can build a peace after all.

Against the long record of dashed expectations, there is no need to belabor the point that a military disengagement on the Golan Heights is not peace. But bad news and suspicions are so endemic to the Middle East that it would be equally muddling to dismiss Syrian-Israeli disengagement as merely a modest first step. It would be a very large first step. The accord, once concluded, can be taken as firm repudiation of the old Arab ideology that forbade any notice to be taken that a Zionist state exists in the Middle East. If there are not good Arabs, there are at least relations . ment of January as "significant -mutual undertakings, joint ventures in however limited a sphere. A growing acceptance of the fact of Israel has been detected among Arab thinkers ever since 1967; now that acceptance is being codified in a formal agreement, In this context, Syria is far more significant than Egypt. President Sadat has already nego tiated a disengagement accord with Israel, but Egyptian credentials among many Arabs, certainly the more radical parties are increasingly suspect, along with the other right-wing and monarchist Arab regimes. Syria, by contrast, has impeccably Arab, impeccably radical, credentials, as the cauldron of Arab nationalism nearly a century ago and as the most ideologically hostile of Israei's neighbors. The Syrian accord will be almost as important to President Sadat's security as to Israel's, for the last four months have caught the Egyptian leader in a dangerously exposed position: As long as only one Arab government had found the way to grant longwithheld recognition to Israel that government had to be considered vuinerable to reprisals from extremists around the Arab world Now Mr. Sadat's calculated risks of last January seem to be receiving an impressive endorsement from a Syrian Basthist'; the politics of accommodation has ceased to be unthinkable for any Arab leader who fancied staying in power, and alive.

Another side effect of a Syrian-Israeli agreement could lead to a shift in the global diplomacy of the Middle East. Last December, at the opening of the caremonial Geneva conference on the Middle East, the Soviet and Israeli foreign ministers met for the first time in more than six years. Andrei A. Gromyko informed Abbs Eban that Moscow hoped to resume diplomatic relations with Israel at the first sign of significant diplomatic progress.

The Israelis were disappointed that Moscow seemed unable to progress," but anticipate that a second agreement, concluded formally at the Geneva conference with Soviet participation, could provide the pretext to end the nearly seven years of diplomatic rupture between Israel and the Soviet Union Resumption of diplomatic relations would not necessarily make for much cordislity. But it would resolve a long-term asymmetry in Israel's world role, and could be of speoffic benefit in matters involving Soviet Jews, .

Against the grief and human tragedy with which this past week began, the most immediately heartening aspect of an Israeli-Syrian accord would be the crushing blow it would deliver to fenatic terrorist designs. A lunatic fringe, posing fraudulently as representatives of the Pales-tinian people, has sought above all to disrupt any diplomatic progress that would tend to legiti-matine the Israeli state; a shocked world has seen the lengths to which these gangsters will go. Now, it seems, their purpose is frustrated. A formal truce and disengagement agreement between Israel and Syria would be as worthy a monument as could be conceived to the memories of the dead in Maalot and Lebanon.

film debut for Brasard, a young as Torquemada but devoid of dramatic action.

"La Cage aux Ours," directed by Martin Handwerker of Belgium, is another attempt-and an inept one—to say something about the generation gap, The Indian entry, "Garm Hava," directed by M. S. Sathyu, presents the problems of a Moslem family, reluctant to move to Pakistan after India's division. There is material here for a strong social drama but Sathyu's film is defeated by formlessness.

"La Paloma," directed by Daniel Schmid and seen in the Critics' Week section of the festival, is an over-acted travesty of "La Dame aux Camélias." It begins brightly as a stylized satire and then descends to become a ponderous serio-comic melodrama, "A Bigger Splash," seen in the same section, is an odd documentary about the English painter David Hockney. The photography of his canvases is quite stunning, but the artist's agony over the departure of his boyfriend is wearying, accompanied as it is by interminable conversations with his friends as to whether he should go to New York or California or stay home, Peter Davis's "Hearts and Minds." another critics choice, aims at evaluating the U.S. policy on Vietnam. It inclodes interviews with politicians and soldiers and excerpts from newsreels.

Yes, but one with a difference, thanks to ingenious technique. Martin Scorsese's brilliant direction galvanizes the stale material into a vivid, exciting melodrama. #### DANCE IN LONDON

Festival Ballet's Successful, Ambitious Seasor

By Oleg Kerensky

ONDON, May 23 (IHT).-With the main section of the Royal Ballet in the United States its principal rival—London Festival Ballet—is having a very successful and ambitious eightweek sesson at the London Coliseum. The season, which ends June 8, has included a new two-act ballet, two acquisitions from abroad, revivals of various works which have not been performed by Festival Ballet for several years, and a new ballet which was canceled the day before the premiere after a dispute hetween the management and the choreographer about whether dancers should appear to strip

In addition, the season also includes a large number of standard classics, and introduces some new stars. As if all that were not enough, last night the company presented what was in some ways the most interesting event of all the first revival in England since 1926 of Massine's

In 1917, "Parade" seemed almost as revolutionary as the Russian revolution with which it coincided. It combined cubist décor and costumes by Picasso with a score by Satle which included factory sirens and type-writers among its sound effects. Massine, who supervised this revival himself, as he supervised one in New York for the Joffrey Ballet last year, says that he was too young and too inexperienced to do the choreography as it should have been done in 1917. He claims that his present version is a great improvement. Certainly it seems to be different; the ending of the ballet is not at all as it was described in C.W. Beaumont's "Complete Book of Ballets" and the solo for the Chinese conjuror, though con-scientiously danced by Kerrison Cooke, scarcely makes the effect it evidently did when it was created by Massine himself,

The most effective dance now is for a pantomime horse, an amusing music-hall stunt with the front half of the horse looking round to see what the back part, played by another man, is doing. But this has little to do with the art of choreography. Carole Hill, as a brash little American girl, was lively and pert, but on the whole this series of little circus numbers now seems pale and slight. The revival has curiosity value, which is appreciated by experts, but little entertainment value. It had controlled the little entertainment value. only a lukewarm reception, though there was an ovation for Massine, a great survivor whose rather more amusing "Galete parisienne" is also in Festival's current repertoire. (A revival of his multi-media "Ode," created in Paris in 1928, might be even more intriguing than "Parade.")

Festival's new two-act work, on the other hand, is not for approval by serious-minded critics but for the enjoyment of a large, nonspecialist audience. Barry Moreland calls his ballet "The Prodigal Son," which risks thoughts of Balanchine and Prokofiev, to say nothing of the Bible. Actually it is a trendy dance-revue to popular music by Scott Joplin and others, which takes its hero lightheartedly through the main events of the 20th century, including the two world wars and the Depression. There is a nightclub out of "Cabaret," with Patricia Ruanna as a Dietrich-type stren and Kenn Wells as the shady MC, and Miss Ruanne reappears in the thirties in a huge car, in which she drives off with the hero, whom she rescues from unemployment for a brief interlude of high life.

lin's "The Great Dictator"?). supported by a chorus line of goose-stepping girls. Paul Clarke is dazzling in the title role and seems just as much at home tapdancing in white the and tails and high-kicking in tennis shirt and trousers as he does doing ballet pirouettes. The ending of the first act, when he becomes a war hero, does not quite work, nor does the final curtain, when Moreland suddenly remembers the title of the work and stages a meaningless reunion with an aging father. But most of "The Prodigal Son" is fast-moving fun. very much beloed by an endless series of quick-changing and

Paul Clarke, who is ending his first season with Festival after many years of comparative neglect with the Royal Ballet, also scored this week in a revival of Jack Carter's "Witch Boy." This theatrical mixture of square dancing and dramatic mime based on "The Ballad of Barbara Allen" used to provide John Gilpin with one of his biggest successes for Festival Ballet, some years ago. Clarke cannot suggest a newborn baby as effectively as Gilpin, and at both the first two performances he was robbed of his highly effective final curtain by a premature blackout of the stage spotlight. (The stage management throughout this sea-son has been lamentable.) but his fey facial makeup suggests that he is no ordinary mortal, his pas de deux with Patricia Ruanne (another recruit from the Royal Ballet) is suitably erotic, and ha conveys all the required terror when ha is lynched by the revivalist preacher and an angry mob. No doubt he will grow further into the part, and be as successful with it as his predeces-

Miss Gielgud, whose glove-seller in "Gaieté Parisienne" is remarkably charming and stylish, also performs "Rose Variations," a sad and unfunny parody of bits of "The Sleening Beauty."

Apart from anything else, she is not sufficiently like a real classical ballerina in physique or appearance to risk a burlesque.

The rest of the repertoire has included a revival of "Les Sylphides," ruined by a new orchestration which has plane and orchestra alternating regardless of Fokine's choreography, and a rather tame version of 'Prince

OPERA IN LONDON: Strength And Weakness of 'Jenufa'

By Henry Pleasants

ONDON, May 23 (IHT) .- That there were more empty seats the usual-and there usually aren't any-at last night's revival Janacek's "Jenufa" by the Royal Opera at Covent Garden woo seem to indicate that the opera-going public remains reluctant to along with the recent vogue for Japacek's operas among critics a other connoisseurs.

The sordidness of the peasant tragedies he favored as subject may have something to do with this reluctance. They are, to sure, hardly more sordid than, say, "Cavalleria Rustican or "Pagliacci," but Janacek did less than his Italian verismo co temporaries to relieve the sinister gloom with compensating episod of exuberant bucolic cheer. Nor would he grant either to his singers or to his audiences t souring melodies, the theatrically effective set pieces that have ke the best of the Italian verismo operas of the turn of the centu in the repertoire for 75 years or more. He probably took his subject more seriously than the Italians did, and it is this affections preoccupation that is at once the strongest and the weakest chara-teristic of such operas as "Jenufa" and "Katya Kabanova."

It is strong because Janacek could, as an extraordinary mast the orchestra, establish a sense of time, place, mood and even and sustain it with apparently inexhaustible resources of cole shading and nuance. This is what so appeals to the critics and t other composseurs. It is weak because he could not, as a man of a theater, stand back and assess the probable concentration span audiences whose identification with his mostly unlovely characte might be less intense and less sympathetic than his.

"Jenufa" is the most effective of his operas. It is most effect? in the orchestra, and it was the orchestra, under the informed ar inspired direction of Charles Mackerras, that emerged as the st of last night's performance. The South African Wendy Fine was new and admirable Jenufa, both vocally and dramatically. T American William Cochran made an impressive Covent Garden deb as Laca, and Amy Shuard repeated her familiar eloquent charg terization of the Kostelnicka.

The consanguinity of the characters in "Jenuta" is so comp. that the program, for the first time in my opera-going experien provides a diagramed family tree. It left me as much in the dr as ever about who is what to whom. The language of this performan according to the program, was English,

Pan Am Seeks Boost in Profits

Pan American World Airways has presented U.S. officials with a detailed "shopping list" of proposed government actions it "conservatively" estimates would yield potential profit opportuni-ties of $341 million to $407.5 million annually if fully implemented. The program would evert the need for future federal subsidy payments to it, Pan Am says. But it also maintains that it should be paid subsidies to offset 1974 and 1975 losses, anticipated because of higher fuel costs, that will be incurred prior to any henefficial results from its proposed program. Major features of the plan include government grants of new routes to Pan Am and restrictions of authority for certain selected foreign airlines (producing $80 million to $86.5 million in added yearly profit), changes in various fare and rate regulations (producing an estimated profit gain of $75 million to $102 million). denial of certain routes or new authority being sought by other airlines and rejection of some proposed relaxations in restrictions on charterflight operations.

American Motors plans to delay introduction of 1875 models to October or possibly November from September. A spokesman declined to give a reason but observers cite several possible ex-planations. AMC's labor contract expires Sept. 16 and the company may hope to avoid snagging introductions with labor troubles—such as in-terfered with the debut of the compact Hornet in the fall of 1969 and the subcompact Gremlin the following spring. Also, AMC plans to in-troduce a new model, the Pacer, early in 1975 and the new car will require some reshuffling of production canacity.

· Directors of Interstate Stores, a U.S. retail chain that lost more than $60 million in the last year, have anthorized the company to file a bankruptcy petition under Chapter XI of the Pederal Bankruptcy Act. The petition seeks permission of the court to continue operating under the court's protection against lawsuits from creditors until arrangements can be made for the company to pay its hills. The board's action followed one week after McCrory Corp. and Interstate said that efforts of the two companies to work out plans for Interstate to take over several store divisions of McCrory had been terminated. Just prior to that time, Sol Cantor, board chairman of Interstate, remarked that if the deal did not go through, "serious problems would be created with respect to Interstate's ability to function as a going concern." Inter-state has about $70 million in long-term deht that if has been attempting to refinance. Most of the banks involved in the refinancing were said to be willing to extend the loan, but some of the insurance companies also involved would not go along, it was said. The deal is understood to have called for complete agreement of

Taiwan Output Off

In Taiwan, the Economic Planning Council says production at small and medium-sized companies making clothing, appliances and plastics mostly for export fell about 30 percent in the first quarter from last year. ATHENS, May 23 (AP-DJ),-Greece's gross national product at current prices reached 427 billion drachmae ($14.5 billion) in 1973, up 30.2 percent from 1972, the Greek government announced today.

later in 1974, although an overall deficit for the year is expected. Oil price increases have hurt

Hong Kong's plastics and textile industries, which account for more than 60 percent of its exports. Overseas orders have been slow and some small factories have closed while many larger ones have shortened schedules. But the price of polystyrene used for plastic toys and polyester fibers for textile mills has begun to level olf. In the Philippines, strong demand and higher prices for cocount products, sugar lumber, copper, gold, nickel, iron ore and other items are expected to keep the economy growing at nearly 10 percent again this year. The coconut industry alone expects to earn about $1 billion if prices stay high. Last year's balanceof-payments surplus was $5.4 expected to be about $800 million this year, up from about $200 million in 1973.

The South Vietnam balance-olpayments position is worsening. The cost of oil imports for civilian use will jump from about $80 million last year to $150 million in 1974, but the actual quantity will drop about 25 percent, Saigon estimates. In Thailand, increased rice exports will earn about $300 million more this year and with earnings from kenaf, jute, tapioca, sugar and tourism should offset oil and fertilizer costs, most officials say. Oil imports this year are likely to rise from $300 million to $600

Malaysia's earnings from oil fields off Borneo and from rubber, palm oil, tin, timber and other exports have created such high profits for many businesses that the government has increased export taxes on a number of Items to fund needed imports. Gas and oil also have been found off the east coast of the Malaysian peninsula.

In Singapore, higher freight rates and oll and various raw material prices have hurt, creating problems for shipping com-panies through increased fuel charges and raw material supply shortages for factories. Last year, Singapore's economy grew hy Il percent, but many bankers are expecting only 5-to-6 percent growth this year.

Indonesia's sharply higher import prices of cement, fertilizer and chemicals should be paid for by oil revenue, which, it is esti-mated, will climb from about $600 million in 1973 to more than $2.7 hillion this year, providing a balance-of-payments surplus of nbout $1.4 hillion. The controller said the examination had shown that the hank "needed less reliance" on what be described as "highly volatile short-term liabilitles." # Drop in Raw Material Prices Spurs Hopes That Zoom Over

LONDON, May 23 (Reuters) .--The prices of metals and other raw materials fell sharply in London today, raising hopes that the two-year-old commodity price hoom-one of the major causes of inflation-may finally have gone into reverse.

Commodity dealers remained wary, however, about predicting a sustained decline in prices. They noted that some raw materials, notably nine and copper, remain in short supply. Nevertheless, Reuters commod-

1973 ACCOUNTS: THE YEAR OF RECOVERY

MONTEDISON makes crafits again. 5,300 m lire for the leader company and 33,300 m. lire consolidated group profits were achieved in 1973, which thus marks the return at the main Italian chemical group into the area at profits. In addition, amortizations were increased in 1973 to maximum levels according to the Italian Law, reaching 146,000 m, lire for the leader and 237,300 m, lire for the whole MONTEDISON group. How could such a roped change at stree-

How could such a rapid change at sitration have taken place in a group which only three years ago closed its accounts in red and in 1972 marked no accumulated loss of lire 458,000 m.?

In brick, the reasons are: the improvement of managerial skill, modernisotion of structures, the increase of demand in the chemical and synthetic fibres markets. In bact, up to two years agn MONTEDISON was a group inhout a proper caroaralismage, having a most diversified production at a thousand items and alternoperating at a lass.

The basic strategy al MONTEDISON's new managerial palicy consisted in concentrating the group's activity in the chemical and synthetic libres sector. where MONTEDISON is present through the major Italian producer in the Italia. MONTEFIBRE.

Particularly, in the chemical sector the company devised and started new activities specialising in fine chemicals, which, as it is known, permits a higher added value than the base chemicals, where the group was heavily engaged during the past managements.

Then there is another sector which, awing to its close relation to its other activities, MONTEDISON intends to further develop: the lorge-scale distribution, where MONTEDISON has the control of the main limitan chain of eng-price stores and supermarkels: STANDA In order to actually concentrate the areyp's ethorts along these lines, it had been necessary in operate a selection among the subsidiaries through the sale of companies not related to MONTEDI-SQN's main line at activities. These sales. representing one of the major efforts of the present management, permilien MONTEDISON to disengage itself, and under lavourable economic conditions in many cases, from activities alien to its new production policy (such as, lar example, in the fields of liquid gas. huilding materials, oluminium and marhler and which will find better development possibilities with other groups mare directly interested in the some. Instead, in order to strengthen its presence

Thus, in the restile sector, where major problems were still left open restructuring plans were defined and initiated at the absolute lactories of Montelither, in the chemical field the reconversion of a number of technically obselect factories was also started.

latics was also started.

The managerial improvements, a more clicacious productive integration, the increasing weight of Montedison mediacts with a higher added value can be illustrated by means of a lessignificant.

One of these is the ratio beta-rea million, and the proceeds of sales, which drepped in 1973 from 67 to 62 percent. To fully understand such a result in should be recalled that there was a sharp rise, in 1973, in the prices of the material-MONTEDISON is mainly in need at the fact that in spric of this the purchase cast incidence has decreased, supplies ample profit that the substantially higher nutleys the company had to meet could be recouped through an improved production efficiency.

the old problem of increasing the Italian shore listing, by quoting, in 1973, three further securities of the MONTEDISON controlled companies: STANDA, ALIMONT and BANCO LARIANO.

and SANCO LARIANO.

1973 was therefore not only the year of MONTEDISON's return to profits.

It was the year in which MONTEDISON definitely outlined its corporate image as a leader in the chemical pharmoceutical and synthetic fibres sectors in Italy, laying down also the necessary laundations for its growing presence on the international markets

Thus, a multi-year agreement with the Soviet Union was cancluded, for a value at 300,000 m fire, comprising a supply of several large chemical plants to the Soviet Union and in exchange for which the group will withdraw substantial quantities at the respective products.

MONTEDISON has thus turned to account its inov-how in the chemical engineering held an a world level, acquiring at the same time new sources at supply for intermediate products, according to a minute which permits to give an elfoncieux response also to the requirements of industrial development of its partner. THE POISON ORACLE By Peter Dickinson, Pantheon. 181 pp. $5.95.

Reviewed by Anatole Broyard

crime is a chimpanzee-a chimpanzee who has learned to communicate through a set of symbols. Here's a plot that raises such questions as "can a chimpanzee lie?" Disguised as a suspense novel, "The Poison Oracle" also broaches such issues as the interplay between language and culture. If the language disintegrates, will the culture join it in a suicide pact? Does the absence of any terminology for cause and effect preserve a society from the decadence that seems to overtake all others? Might it not be necessary for the 20th century to maintain at least one underdeveloped country as a guarantee, in a sense, of our history? Are we, as Max Lerner once said about literature, "constantly in need of rebarbarization?"

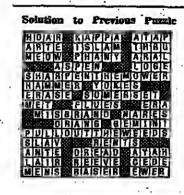

The corpse in Peter Dickinson's latest book is not so much a person as a culture. Can the primitive marsh peoples in the Arab sultanate of Q'kut ignore the fact that there is oil under their mud buts? Can they survive the disease-laden effluvia that drains down from half of Asia into their swamp? Can a heroine with a nose that is "less accipitrine than columbaceous" singlehandedly overcome with her sexuality all of the author's erudi-

For the average suspense reader the answer will be no. Even an indignant no, since the protagooist doesn't even get to rub her columbaceous nose. To them "The Poison Oracle" will seem less like a mystery novel than a PhD thesis with a couple of dead people pressed in its pages: Others, those with a weakness for the crime of originality, will go on praising Dickinson and showering prizes on him.

Wesley Morris, the anti-hero of the book—yes, the anti-hero has infiltrated the suspense genre is a "psycholinguist" who has been offered a huge salary and a laboratory in Q'kut by the whimsical sultan who was at Oxford with him, Morris loves his chimpanzee,

A difficult competitive auction landed South in a tricky contract of three no-trump on the dia-gramed deal. The new-suit bid of one heart in response to the overcall of one diamond was forcing in his style.

Standard bidders would have to make a cue-bid of two clubs to make sure that North continued. As it was, both players made later cue bids in the epponents black suits, showing strength and allowing no-trump to be reached. West led the club king, the right choice when partner is unlikely to have the ace since it allows for the possibility of a singleton South won with the ace and led the diamond ten, on which West played low. If the declarer had played low from dummy, he would have made 12 tricks without trouble, but he misguessed by putting up the king. This would have been the winning play if East had held the singleton queen. It was clear from the bidding that West held the ace, but the position of the queen was not clear. The contract was now in jeopardy, and communications were a major problem. "As the cards lie, the contract could have been made by leading four rounds of hearts. But South not unnaturally believed that the spade king was on his right. Hoping for a defensive error, he ducked a heart, won by East, The defense continued clubs, and South could now have made nine tricks by taking the queen. But not knowing he was due for two specie tricks, he ducked.

Title Bouts in Japan

By Dave Anderson
NEW YORK, May 28 (NYT).
—In what he calls his private thought book, the 1972 Otympic 100 meter champion once wrote, "Til die before I can really live."

But even the obituary of Vin-cent Matthews will be a re-minder not so much that he won the gold medal hat that he slouched on the victory stand. In the hours and days that followed, his explanations were minimal. He even told his mother that he "just didn't feel like" standing at attention, Now, simost two years later, with the publication of his compelling autobiography, "My Race Be Won," his explanation spills out in a torrent.

Vincent Matthews is black and that influenced him. But beyond that he is an individual, and all track and field athletes are by the nature of their individual role in their individual events. He is an individual who is complex, sensitive, brooding, and concerned with living with what he demands of himself rather than what others demand of him. Perhaps more important to the world, he has emerged as a symbol of what the Olympics have become, a farce of politics among nations, instead of what the Clympics are supposed to be, the flame of competition among athletes. And so, when the national anthem was played and the American flag was raised in Munich that day, Vincent Matthews slouched. And he was booed. He doesn't expect to be cheered now but he deserves to be heard.

Wrong Tune "I was standing there being myself," he wrote in collaboration with Nell Amdur, because that's the way I felt about the whole program. The country was getting the praise for what I had done. But they weren't playing The Vincent Matthews anthem,' they were playing the anthem for the United States.

Black Olympian: Victim of 'Slouch'

I felt that I had worked and practiced and had worked about how I was going to get to tha Olympic trials. I was the one who had to run against Lee Physiologically, it's also a Evans to shut the mouth of skepties like Bill Bowerman [the U.S. track and field coach). I was the one standing up there, no one else but me. "Sure the U.S. Olympic Committee had given me a chance to come to the Olympics. But I had to beg to get there. As far as the USOC was concerned, I was just another body to fill up a sweatsuit. As far as I was concerned, it was like a job. There was no love for each other. What did it matter what I did on the victory stand? What were the Olympics for anyway? Weren't they supposed to be for the athletes to enjoy a symbol of competition and goodwill, like playing chess with a Russian you'll never see again? Why did the public feel the necessity for some sort of vicarious identification that forced the injection of nationalism and patriotism?

"I just wasn't going along with all those patriotic people, period. I just don't dig patriotism and boundaries. Tve always felt that there are two hig things most wars are started over: one is patriotism, the other is religious boundaries Land always comes into any dispute but it's usually hidden behind these two reasons, Look at the Arab-Israeli dispute, Ireland-England, India-Pakistan. Patriotism and religion are responsible for the fighting. What provokes the fighting, of course, are the superpatrints, who preach love of country, but, in reality, are selling personal gain and goals like international expansion for themselves."

The Feeling of Running It's a harsh book. It exposes the fraud of payoffs to amateurs in track meets. It even attacks

Physiologically, it's also a shidy of what makes a quarter-miler run, particularly the pain that must be endured when the athlete catches "rig." the runners' abbreviation for rigor mor-tis, meaning that moment in the race when the body becomes rigid with weariness and tension.

"At the 350-yard mark, pain that I had never had in the 100 or the 880 nr the mile hit mc," he writes of his first ex-perience. "It was like running into a glass door. My body began to disintegrate into pieces. I tried to lift my legs but they were weighted down, as if I were a prisoner on a road gang carrying lead balls around my ankles My arm movement, which had been so fluid and pronnunced in nther events as I finished the race, was virtually useless. "I fight rig now hy telling myself to pump my arms in a steady rhythm, lift my legs and relax my body. If my mind forgets to do any one of those three things, my body takes over. Young guys in the quar-ter will throw their heads from side to side as if to summon extra energy, or thrnw their arms out wildly. But they're trying to fight it nff with their body instead of their minds. With rig, you have to fight it nii with your mind hy concentration. When your body takes over, you're lost."

Vincent Matthews is a professional quarter-miler now. He'll be running in the International Track Association meet at Madison Square Garden here next Wednesday and he'll prohably be booed, as he was in Munich that day. But there's another phrase in his thought book that covers his hurden. "Speak softly." he wrote, "and wait for better times."

Carbureton runs—the term goes back to the period when the racing cars used carburetors provided the crews an opportunity to check fuel consumption and tire wear. Fuel checks are more important this year than ever because the USAC has placed a limit of 280 gallons on the overall use of fuel for each car for the 500 miles.

That means, said Don Knight, a fuel-tire specialist, that the cars must achieve 1.8 miles a gallon to finish the race.

Within seven days of his becoming king, Sir Horace Wal-pole confided to another knight: "I will tell you something, the king loves medals ... I imagine his taste goes to antiques, too, perhaps to pictures, but that I have not heard. If you learn of any purchases that may be made in either kind, and that are beyond your own purse. comes from ex-hairdresser Elaine Kay, 21, of Fort Leuderdale, Fla. who this week married the 63year-old heir to the A & P fortune, Huntington Hartford. She is his fourth wife. Asked why, after three divorces, he had chosen marriage again, Hartford had no time to answer-his wife did it for him "because he's in love." "That's a very good answer," said he. "And he's going to have fun," said she,

Mrs. Hartford recalled their meeting in the Bahamas: "I was looking for romance and lo and behold he just swept me off my feet. He turned out to be really nice." She went on to tell Maicolm Carter of the Associated Press that she came from the "wrong side of the tracks," that her father was a "retired gambler" and that her mother was a medical laboratory technician. The Hartfords are honeymooning in New York where they were married Tuesday.

A report on federal spending at President Nixon's Florida and California estates, according to the Los Angeles Times, reveals the following memo, the result of a May 21, 1970, visit to Key Biscayne by Ron Jackson, White House food service coordinator: "No ice cube maker and no storage for ice cubes. Install in command post or communications house. President does not like ice cubes with holes in them."

Pat Nixon got to the point with reporters the other day when they brought up the subject of Watergate and the President's transcripts. Asked if she had read them she said, "Yes, I did. It takes 9 to 12 hours." Then she turned to the reporter questioning her during a luncheon of congressional and cabinet wives, and asked if the reporter had read the transcripts. "Only about 300 pages," was the reply. "When you've read it all come back," Mrs. Nizon said.

"It's a difficult time for her," commented Helen Smith, Mrs. Nixon's press secretary, "She says she doesn't want to talk about these things because she wants to focus on the positive." Mrs. Smith did not think that the first lady had listened to the tapes from which the transcripts were made.

Radical Mayor in Wisconsin a Year Later-No Harm Done I must be doing a little something

By Seth S. King

MADISON, Wis., May 23 (NYT). Paul Soglin, a 29-year-old alderman and University of Wisconsin radical, shook the people of Madison by becoming their mayor.

A year ago last month, Mr. Soglin, who had already spent five years as a member of the Madison City Council while completing a law course at the University of Wisconsin, put together a coalition of newly enfranchised students, labor groups and the city's old McGovern Democrats and edged out William Dyke, the

And they all agree that Mr. Soglin has managed to carry the politically mixed, 32-member City Council with him in such accomplishments as expanding Madison's bus service, starting work on a shopping mail on State Street and a new concourse around the city funds to start a day-care center program, and organizing student vigilantes to help crack down on the owners of the decaying houses in which many university students live.

One of Mr. Soglin's recurring headaches is his stubborn defense of police chief David Couper, a Dyke administration holdover whose informal approach to police administration has brought continued criticism from traditionalists on the force.
